'One for the Road' May Spell 'Trouble'

"The driver having that 'one for the road' this holiday season may be legally sober but his reactions will be slowed and he is more apt to have an accident than the man who chose not to imbibe," Robert J. Cheney, Automobile Club of Southern California's Public Safety Department manager, declared today.

He pointed out that studies have found that alcohol, even in small amounts, will slow the reaction time of a driver, reduce the effectiveness of his vision, lessen control of muscle and nerve tissues and serve as a depressant and not as a stimulant as many believe.

"ALTHOUGH THESE facts are known to many there is a very strong tendency on the part of many drivers to ignore the facts," Cheney continued. "People, older as well as young, sincerely believe that alcohol, at least in the quantity or manner they use it, does not affect them. Two very important facts on this subject not known by this group are:

"1. There are effects, other than physical, which cannot be felt.

"2. There is a tendency for alcohol to affect the brain so as to mask from the person his own condition," Cheney declared.

He said that "heavy drinkers" create a different problem. Their condition is obvious, they stagger to their cars and then weave in and out of traffic in a reckless manner. Their judgement, sight, and co-ordination are badly impaired and there is no doubt to anyone as to this person's condition.

"THE LIGHT or social drinker," however, is the big problem. Even though he can pass approved field tests given
